

Besides by the endings, how do I know when something is NOMINATIVE?

- 1) Is est or a form of est (erat, sunt, etc) in the sentence? Remember, est (and forms of est) take the twin noms!
- 2) It agrees with the verb (both are singular or plural).
- 3) It's the first word in the sentence and definitely NOT accusative. Confirm with an ending check.
- 4) The next word is definitely accusative, thus it must be nominative. (Confirm with an ending check.)

How do I know? Using My Noun Chart

Besides by the endings, how do I know when something is GENITIVE?

- 1) Is it piggy-backing on a prepositional phrase?
- 2) Is it nested inside a noun/participle or noun/adjective phrase?
- 3) Is it describing another noun, like vir magnae virtutis (a man of great courage)?
- 4) Is it a partitive genitive and following an "amount", like plūs vīnī or nīmium vīnī?

Besides by the endings, how do I know when something is in the ABLATIVE?

- 1) It is following a Sid Space Ablative Astronaut preposition:
Sine - without
In - in/on Dē - about/down from Sub - under Prō - in front of Ab or ā - (away) from Cum - with Ex or ē - from, out of
- 2) There's a perfect passive participle in the sentence and it is part of the "by" phrase nested between the noun and the participle (ablative of agent ā/ab or ablative of means).
- 3) There's a time word and an ordinal number. Confirm with an ending check. Translate with "in" or "at" (Abl Time When)
- 4) There's a passive verb of any tense and it is part of the "by" phrase (ablative of agent ā/ab or ablative of means).
- 5) It's with a participle at the beginning of the sentence and set off by a comma—Abl. Abs.

Besides by the endings, how do I know I have an ACCUSATIVE?

- 1) In a sentence following NOM + ACC + Verb pattern, it is most likely the 2nd word. Confirm with an ending check.
- 2) In a sentence following NOM + DAT + ACC + Verb pattern, where the verb is a giving or showing verb, it is probably the 3rd word. Confirm with an ending check.
- 3) If the subject is understood from the previous sentence (thus no nominative), the first word may well be the accusative. Confirm with an ending check.
- 4) If you are trying to distinguish between a nominative and an accusative, if you clearly have a subject/nominative already, then it is the accusative, and vice versa.
- 5) It's the object of one of the following prepositions: ad - to, in (+acc) - into, prope - near, inter - between/among, per - through, post - after/behind, extrā - outside, trāns - across
- 6) There's a present active or perfect active participle nearby and it is nested between the noun and participle, acting as the object of the participle.
- 7) There's a time word (hōra, mēnsis, annus, etc) and a cardinal (counting) number with it. Confirm with an ending check and translate with "for". (accusative duration of time)
- 8) It's the subject of an indirect statement—it's after a Verb of the Head and there is an infinitive following nearby.

Besides by the endings, how do I know when something is DATIVE?

- 1) Is there a giving, showing, or offering verb in the sentence? (dat/dedit, trādit/trādidit, ostendit, dēmōnstrat, offert/obtulit, etc.)
- 2) If yes, to #1, is it possibly following the sentence pattern of (NOM +) DAT + ACC + VERB?
- 3) Is it a verb that takes a dative object? (crēdit, favet, placet, respondet, resistit, appropinquat, praeficit, paret, imperat, etc)
- 4) Does the sentence start with one of the following:
necesse est + DAT + inf.
difficile est + DAT + inf.
facile est + DAT + inf.
commodum est + DAT + inf.
decōrum est + DAT + inf.
melius est + DAT + inf.
- 5) Is there a passive periphrastic (gerundive) phrase nearby? Then it's probably a dative of agent.
